Dear Madame Riba,

It is with the most profound sorrow that I received the recent news of the death of your husband, a loss which will be felt deeply not only by his relatives and friends, but by the world of learning at large. You have lost a sincere and devoted husband, while Europe has lost a great scholar and a greater poet.

We of the Anglo-Catalan Society who have had the privilege of meeting him on his recent visit to England feel his death even more keenly since the memory of his presence, in lecture hall or private house, is still with us. How thankful we are that his poems and his lectures will keep it alive for years to come.

Please accept, then, on behalf of the Society, and of the university to which I belong, our most sincere sympathy in these difficult hours.

Yours sincerely,

(President)
